

The New Revised Christian Religious Studies (CRS) is a competency and outcome-based one, which aims at developing in learners essential skills for building good relationships with God and man. The competency framework provides clear expectations, dictates fundamental skills and promotes all-inclusive growth for learners. The curriculum is profoundly skill based, practical and result oriented.

Furthermore, the design and delivery process of this curriculum remains thematic, spiral, cyclical and concentric whereby learning contents are graduated, sequenced, and replicated across the class levels to align with learners' maturation and cognition. The curriculum approach focused on knowledge, skills and competencies. The overriding learning experiences and achievement of the curriculum are geared towards what learners can do skilfully, thereby making it learner-centred, performative, and result oriented.

The CRS curriculum is based on a multi-disciplinary approach and is diverse to cover critical basic foundational knowledge and concepts on the Christian religion, rooted in the Bible. These are as well significant aspects of religious education and curriculum design.

Learners will engage with national and global issues through context-based lessons that promote critical thinking and social responsibility. Concepts and contents that are fundamental to the learners' overall development, growth and effective contribution in human development are integrated into the curriculum, ensuring they gain a broader understanding of their role as global citizens.

to their everyday lives.

General Objectives of the CRS curriculum

The general objectives of the CRS curriculum are to:

1. develop in learners the awareness of God, His nature, His ordinances and laws to build their faith in Him and live a life consistent with biblical teachings;
2. expose learners to critical thinking for themselves, respect the views of others and appreciate the dignity of labour and the moral values specified in the National Policy on Education;
3. expose the learners to embrace God's means of reconciliation with humanity through the death of His son Jesus Christ and to emulate the teachings of Jesus Christ in their daily lives;
4. develop and nurture learners' spiritual growth to live a purposeful life, shun corruption, and contribute to nation-building; and
5. expose learners to the knowledge of the core values of the Christian faith and practice required for commitment and devotion to God.
